Actions to stop doing

- Being late to meetings
 - Often times, our schedules didn't line up so there wasn't a feeling of urgency to show up to meetings, so everyone that would show up would work until everyone showed up, and then have a scrum meeting
 - Group members tend to eat around meeting times, and many end up late as a result
 - Should find better meeting times, that fits into our eating and working schedule and start with Scrum meeting every time so everyone is caught up
- Leaving early from the meetings
 - Not allocating enough time to work, and leaving early results in missing out on a lot of progress, so the team member would have a tough time getting updated
 - Better meeting times, overall have more dedication for work

Actions to start doing

- We should start being more on time
 - Because people coming at different times is a bit disorienting
- Be more open to constructive criticism
 - We had a bump in the road with a group member, gain better communication skills so everyone can work off of each other
 - Know when to speak up when you need help, and don't be too prideful
 - Be sure to recognize when a team member needs help, especially if they haven't outputted much work over the Sprint

Actions to keep doing

- Keep good working habits
 - Our working habits are incredible, in the beginning we were really ahead of time
- Work flow and working together
 - Our dynamic is pretty good because there's usually two heads looking at code and testing it
 - Two heads is better than one
- Ask questions and give updates to keep each others informed
 - We ask questions to know what each other is working on, so no one is behind or playing catch up
- Made a bug log so team members can handle potential bugs and issues
 - Team members can help each other through difficulties
 - Talk to each other outside of Scrum meetings
